CHASING CELL PHONES

CNOA and HIDTA are joining hosting “Chasing Cell Phones”.
A mobile phone contains a wealth of information to an investigator no matter what the crime. Mobile phones contain a person’s personal and business contacts, text messages, emails, pictures, and videos. This class will explore the methods of exploiting a suspect’s cellular phone and phone company records to assist investigations involving narcotics trafficking, homicide, sex crimes, gang related crimes, identity theft, and other types of criminal activity. This class will increase law enforcement officers’ awareness and appreciation of the evidence and intelligence located in a mobile phone and provide students with the tools and training to prepare search warrants to legally obtain that evidence. Each student will receive templates for search warrants for cellular phones, Court Order templates for toll records and other information, contact information for cellular service providers including service of process information and 24 hour emergency contacts, along with training and information resources.

- The recent California Supreme Court decision and how it affects cell phone searches
- Why you don’t need a Search Warrant for cell phone records
- Obtaining, interpreting, and managing call detail records, cell tower information, and billing records
- GPS pinging: What the Federal courts say and how to avoid common mistakes using the information
- Evidence preservation and data recovery using low-cost or free alternatives to expensive forensic software applications
- How to bypass the security on a mobile phone and find deleted content
- Turning the suspect’s phone into probable cause to search their house
- Determining a suspect’s new number when he dropped his old phone number
